Commissioners Higgins and Eliot, who were appointed a committee to further the appointment of a stenographer and additional draughtsmen for the Board, presented a report stating that they had appeared before the Budget Committee of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and urged that provision for such employees be made in the budget for 1913, and that later, Commissioner Eliot, representing the committee, appeared before the Board of Estimate and advocated the matter but in so doing he was opposed by a subordinate of the Department in the Boroughs of Manhattan and Richmond, resulting in a denial of the request of this Board; the report expressed the resentment of the committee against such interference and protested against the action of an employee in thus opposing the action of the Board.
